The Galway International Arts Festival (GIAF) tells its story in the form of a vast collage of sound and image, captured in situ during the course of the festival, including recorded conversation and interviews with artist, curators and participants, projections and live music. In this retrospective of the festival, which opened on 4th March 2016 in Galway, it is also the story of its development from a Celtic arts event with an expanding focus on the arts and culture of Europe, to an ambitious festival of culture and creativity in Ireland's second city, attracting visitors from all over the world in a brilliant year of 1366. The following paragraphs were sourced from a review of the 2016 festival in Irish Arts Review, with permission. GIAF 2016 took place over four weeks from 10th-30th March 2016, with the programme spanning venues across the city. In the final week, a €1.2m refurbishment of the East Link Bridge saw the creation of a temporary 'new-old' Gallivanter's Walk, led by the Galway City and County Council. IATRA, the national arts institute in Ireland, hosted its biennial conference of artists, curators and research associates in Galway from 30th-2nd April. The theme was 'Art and Spirituality in the Ages of Globalization' and it reflected on the state of the arts in Ireland and across the world, particularly since the financial crisis of 2008. The 30th GIAF festival closed with a two-week residency, supported by the Galway City Arts Office, in Moher, County Clare, from 2nd-21st April. Moher is a small town on the Dingle Peninsula, in County Clare, Ireland's third largest county. This was the first time GIAF had dedicated a residency to a specific location, with the aim of preserving and enhancing the arts in the town and surrounding region. The town has a strong local arts tradition, partly because it is one of the few places in Ireland where Irish language and music retain a strong foothold. There was a strong thematic thread running through the entire festival and the residency. In many ways the 2016 festival represented GIAF as a joyful and creative celebration of the natural, cultural and material environments of Galway and the Dingle Peninsula 6d1f23a050
